An overview of the RHM program:

RHM is not a training program. It is self-guided process through which an RHM candidate prepares an analysis of a property using the concepts and tools taught in the Pillar programs described below). The analysis is then reviewed and graded by a panel of NCHM experts.

Housing professionals who attend NCHM training in each of our four Pillar areas and pass the certification exams are eligible to apply for RHM candidacy. Once accepted, the candidate has eight weeks to prepare and submit the RHM Property Assessment using NCHM's online program. The RHM Property Assessment is then reviewed and graded by NCHM's Certification Review Board – a panel of experts selected from among our senior faculty. If the Property Assessment is acceptable, the candidate is awarded the RHM certification.

Candidates may complete the four pillar courses in any order.

Candidates are guided through the assessment process by online video and audio instruction. All necessary forms are supplied. The online instructions include refreshers on key topics covered in the Pillar programs and applicable to assessment.

The final product not only meets the requirement for receiving the RHM designation, it is a practical and useful tool for identifying and addressing any property issues and improving property performance.
